My father was a bartender who worked for over 50 years in bars around Belfast. Sometimes he would bring me into work with him and so I grew up loving the sounds and smells of the bar, the craic, the laughter and the smell of the beer and the whiskey. Especially the whiskey. Now that I am making my own whiskey I am naming it after my father. In 50 years as a bartender he saw a lot of things and heard a lot of stories, but like all good bartenders, he was true to his code and told no tales.

My father, John Mulgrew. “The Quiet Man” or as they say in the Irish ... “An Fear Ciuin”.
